

Matchmaking for Marriage Relationship (A)

Revival of traditional matchmaking service Nowadays, communication has never been so fast; meeting people has never been so easy, but more and more people are looking for and using some kind of matchmaking service - online or offline. We all see the revival of the millennium-old traditional matchmaking service industry. People looking for matchmaking service are serious love and marriage seekers. They are quite prepared to pay a huge amount of money in exchange for the highest rate of success in the shortest time possible. The Guinness Book of World Records listed Orly Hod (Orly the Matchmaker) - whose fees run up to $100,000 - as the world's priciest matchmaker. We don't have to look at the statistics before we know more people live longer today than those a century ago; more people get divorced today than those a century ago. We begin to wonder why marriage relationships won't last longer than those a century ago. Anyone could easily give dozens of reasons. Of course, most people would think of love and marriage is more an art than a science. But recent research has discovered that even personality and behavior orientations have genetic determinants, and so have marriage relationships. We also see what the matchmakers are basically applying in matching people is the nowadays &quot;scientific&quot; tool - psychological tests, whether they are called compatibility test, survey or profile. Almost all matchmakers take the view that compatibility is the golden rule. On the contrary, relationships do not depend only on compatibility. There are numerous real cases that some couple disliked each other, but were able to stay together for their entire lives, while other couple loved each other deeply, but were only able to enjoy each other's company for a very brief period of time. That is why there are so many great love stories like &quot;Romeo and Juliette&quot;. If the problematic issues of marriage relationships can aptly be resolved by employing compatibility test, life would relatively be easy. Relationships might not depend on compatibility.

About the Author

Rel Adviser has keen interest in studying theories and practices in predicting the future of individuals since 1970 and acquired unparalleled knowledge in marriage relationships. He offers unprecedented relationship advice to serious love and marriage seekers on matchmaking.

Source: <http://www.contentking.eu>